

General Guidelines

When a specific model of crane is mentioned, look it up to determine the type of crane (definitions are below).

Mark all sentences that fit the cohort, as in.

Use the maybe classification sparingly; we really want to know if you think the reports are in or out.

If you think a sentence is in a cohort but aren't completely sure, lean towards yes.

Caused By Wind

Classify in if wind is mentioned in the sentence as affecting the crane or payload at all. It does not need to be the primary cause of the accident.

Mobile Crane Accident

Classify in if the crane mentioned in the sentence is a mobile, not ground or building-mounted, crane.

ONLY MARK SENTENCES THAT SPECIFY THE USE OF A MOBILE CRANE

Mobile cranes include crawler, wheel, truck, and locomotive-mounted cranes.

Even if the accident doesn't have to do with the crane failing (e.g., the worker fell while washing the crane), if the crane is a mobile crane, the sentence should be classified as in.

Static Crane Accident

Classify in if the crane mentioned in the sentence is a static, ground or building-mounted, crane.

ONLY MARK SENTENCES THAT SPECIFY THE USE OF A STATIC CRANE

Static cranes include tower, luffing jib, gantry, overhead or other permanently or semi-permanently mounted crane

Even if the accident doesn't have to do with the crane failing (e.g., Worker fell while washing the crane), if the crane is a static crane, the sentence should be classified as in.

FAQ (Feel free to add questions below)

What if the type of crane isn't mentioned? Classify as out

When to use maybe? If there are no sentences currently marked in and you think that there is a sentence that would be in the cohort, but you are not sure
